

THEY ALL WENT WILLINGLY.

Chose Exile In Preference To Standing Their Trial.

DOCUMENT THE EXILES SIGNED.

All Honolulu Turns Out To Witness the Departure of the Australia—Child Knocked Down, and a Young Lady Faints—Exiles Covered With Leis.

In the history of Honolulu seldom has there been seen a larger crowd on the Oceanic wharf than assembled Saturday afternoon. The facts that it was a half holiday, a more than ordinarily beautiful afternoon and that it is the proper thing to see the steamer off, combined with the departure of eleven of the self constituted exiles, all contributed towards this. Nowhere in the wide world could such a sight have been seen but in this city, no other steamer ever starts under such favorable auspices as does the Australia. The wealth and beauty of Honolulu turned out in its best clothes on foot and in carriages, the vendors of flowers were as persistent as ever, although trade was livelier than usual with them, the band played its best and everyone seemed good natured and happy, even the exiles themselves. Some few had feared that some kind of demonstration would be made at the wharf by the friends of those who were leaving their country for their country's good, but nothing of the kind was attempted. They spent their enthusiasm in purchasing leis with which to decorate the exiles, in hearty handshakes and alohas for the future. The political prisoners who were given passports from the Foreign office instead of obtaining them in the usual way at the Custom-house were eleven in number: John Radin, James Brown, Fred Wundenberg, Charles Creighton, A. P. Peterson, F. H. Redward, P. G. Camarinos, A. Carriane, Arthur White, Frank Honeck and Nick Peterson, the latter deciding to go at the last minute.

THE LAST FAREWELLS OF THE EXILES ON THE DECK OF THE AUSTRALIA.

Charles Creighton was interviewed by an ADVERTISER reporter a few minutes before his departure and in answer to the question why he made up his mind to leave the country, replied:

"Anything was preferable to the life we had to live at the prison; not that we had anything in particular to complain of in the way of food or accommodations, which were all we could expect, and Mr. Low made it as pleasant as he could for us consistently with his duty as jailor. But you don't know what six weeks almost solitary confinement will do for a man. Mind you we were only allowed four hours exercise in the yard out of the twenty-four. But the weariness of that cell life is indescribable. It puts a man in that mental condition that he would do anything, say anything, sign anything, even to signing away his own life, to get away from it and out in the free air again."

"By the way, Mr. Creighton," said the reporter, "how about that document you signed to procure your freedom? Have you a copy of it?"

"No, I have not. We were not allowed to take copies, although I asked for one."

"Can you give me the substance of it?"

"As near as I can remember, it was in these words, and being a lawyer and the document a short one I think it is about as near right as memory can make it:

"Whereas, the undersigned, Charles L. Creighton, a resident of Honolulu, Island of Oahu, is now confined in Oahu jail upon the charge of complicity in the recent rebellion; and

"Whereas, the said Charles L. Creighton is desirous of leaving the Islands of Hawaii on or before February 23d, 1895;

"Now, therefore, permission is hereby given the said Charles L. Creighton to do so, upon the condition that he does so leave on or before said date at his own expense and without recourse on the Republic of Hawaii. It is further agreed that during the absence of said Creighton from the Republic no charge arising out of his complicity in the late rebellion will be made against him by or for the Republic, and that the period of such absence shall be entirely at the pleasure of the Minister of Foreign Affairs of said Republic."

About this time the last whistle blew and bidding aloha to Mr. Creighton and his friends the reporter sought the dock.

In casting off from the wharf, the sudden tightening of the bow line of the steamer from the steam winch knocked down a little boy who was too close to it. In falling the boy grazed his cheek on the wharf so that the blood flowed. This so scared the young lady who was with him that she fainted. She was soon revived, however, and sent home.

Amid the waving of handkerchiefs and hands, the throwing of leis from the steamer to the wharf, the shouting of the last messages to and from the strains of the band the good ship turned her bow to the sea, carrying the self imposed exiles away from their beloved Hawaii, never to return but at the will of its Foreign Minister or in the event of annexation to that great republic on the other side.

Preston Harrison Departs.

William Preston Harrison of Chicago, tourist, newspaper writer and good fellow generally, left Honolulu on the Warrimoo yesterday to continue his trip among the South Sea islands. Mr. Harrison will go to Fiji and from thence to Samoa, reaching Auckland the latter part of April where he will be joined by a traveling friend with whom he will continue his wanderings about the globe. Mr. Harrison is as ardent a supporter of annexation as ever and firmly believes that the consummation of the hopes of the Republic are not far distant.

JAILOR LOW'S ELEGANT CANE.

Some Of His Late Boarders Give Him A Surprise.

There Is A History Connected With the Cane That Its Owner May Not Know.

On Saturday afternoon Jailor Low received an elegant cane, accompanied by the following letter, which explains itself:

Honolulu, Feb. 23, 1895.
J. A. Low, Esq.

This little memento is presented to you by your friends who lately sojournd with you, as a mark of their individual good will toward you for the many little acts of kindness received at your hands during the trying times and under the circumstances in which we were all placed; we wish you to consider this entirely a personal matter, and no other significance is to be attached thereto.

F. WUNDENBERG,
NICHOLAS PETERSON,
P. G. CAMARINOS,
MANUEL REIS,
FRED. HARRISON,
T. W. RAWLINS,
JAMES BROWN,
JOHN RADIN,
J. S. WALKER, and others.

The cane is made out of the most elegant piece of Kauwila wood that could be found on the island, the ferule being in silver and the handle mounted in gold with the following inscription: "J. A. Low, from his friends, Honolulu, Feb. 23, '95." It is one of the most elegant canes ever made in the islands and cost fifty dollars.

There is a history connected with this cane that should make it doubly valuable in the eyes of its fortunate owner. It was originally made by the order of the Hui Aloha Aina and designed as a present to James H. Blount on his departure from the islands. That gentleman refused to accept it or any other present, or even to allow Mrs. Blount to receive one from the same society. The cane remained on the jeweler's hands until yesterday, when it was presented to Mr. Low.

MCDOWELL STILL HERE.

The Captain of the Warrimoo Wants No More Exiles.

Archie McDowell made every preparation to leave on the Warrimoo yesterday, but he is still here. He had his trunk packed, said good-bye to his numerous friends and went down to the wharf and even tried to go aboard. There were two things, however, which prevented his departure for Suva, Fiji, his destination. One of these was that he had failed to provide himself with a ticket, rather a necessary requisite on that elegant vessel, and the other was that Captain Bird most emphatically refused to take him, ticket or not. "I want no more exiles aboard my ship," said Captain Bird, "I had to give $150,000 bonds on account of the last three I took from here before the ship could leave Vancouver. No more exiles in mine."

Mr. McDowell says he is entirely penniless and unable to purchase a ticket anywhere. He is willing to leave if the authorities will send him away and will keep his trunk packed for that purpose. If Marshal Hitchcock does not take him to his hotel in the meantime he proposes to call on Commissioner Hawes in the morning and ask his assistance in the matter. He says he fully expected that the authorities, knowing his poverty, would have made some provision for his passage today.
